

Eplerenone doubles for the second month

Eplerenone 25mg tablets saw their average UK trade price more than double in November, having previously experienced the same rise in October, according to the latest figures provided by WaveData.

The category M cardiovascular treatment saw its average price rise by 111% to £33.06 (US$44.25) in November, despite the lowest available offer remaining unchanged at £4.10 (see Figure 1). In October, the presentation had experienced an identical average price rise of 111% to £15.65 (Generics bulletin, 17 November 2017, page 10).

Among the 'biggest risers' seen in Figure 2, glimepiride tablets dominated, with 30-count packs of four strengths – 1mg, 2mg, 3mg and 4mg – accounting for the top four average price rises seen in November. The highest strength saw the steepest rise of 336% to £5.58, while the lowest strength experienced the slightest increase of the four presentations with a rise of 178% to £2.20. The cheapest available offers for every strength except the 1mg tablets were unchanged.

The rises come as the UK's Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee (PSNC) continues to put pressure on the country's Department of Health (DoH) to agree to almost 100 price concessions to adjust reimbursement prices for November (see page xx).

As Figure 3 shows, some declines were also seen in November. Naproxen 250mg tablets in 28-count packs saw their average price more than halve to £0.49 despite the cheapest available offer slipping by just 3% to £0.33. And amlodipine 10mg tablets in the same pack size experienced an average drop of three-tenths to £1.86, while the lowest price was almost unmoved at £1.29.

Meanwhile, atorvastatin and lansoprazole continued to feature highly among our 'fast movers' representing the products with the highest number of offers in the marketplace (see Figure 4).
